

Clues You Are Addicted to Travel

- You speak in airport codes not city names.
- You can say “Cheers” in multiple languages.
- You can identify planes just by looking at them.
- You can name the airline by looking an airplane’s tale.
- You start all your stories with “When I was in...”
- You plan trips you will never take.
- You have more than one currency in your wallet.
- You run a travel blog
- You can tell where people have been by the cheesy logos and sayings on their shirts.
- You always ask people “where are you from?” instead of “how are you?”
- You have elite flier status on multiple airlines.
- You attend travel conferences multiple times a year.
- You don’t have paintings on the wall – you have maps.
- If you haven’t been anywhere in a few months, you get the shakes.
- You spend two hours each day reading travel blogs and websites.
- When people ask you about your hobbies, all your answers contain the word “travel.”
- Some people cry when they leave home. You cry when you have to go back.
- You write a post about being a travel addict.
