In Thomas Hardy's "The Mayor of Casterbridge," Hardy depicts an inherently one-sided relationship, where one party valiantly attempts to please the other to no avail. ^{irony, tone, and contrasting} By using diction that indicates both Henchard's coldness as well as Elizabeth's docile warmth, ~~Hardy~~ Hardy reveals Henchard to be a ~~harsh~~ harsh, misogynistic, and elitist individual that entirely contrasts with Elizabeth's humble and innocent personality. ~~Their relationship is doomed to fail.~~ Although Henchard loves his daughter inwardly, he outwardly can only express his shame and distaste, increasing the distance between father and daughter. ^{perhaps both of their social status and his past}

Henchard is introduced to Elizabeth as an "enigma," ~~evoking~~ evoking images of something distant and foreign to her. They are from entirely different social classes, making it difficult for them to relate to each other ~~with~~ with a sense of shared experiences. Henchard exacerbates this distance with his immediate "agitation... his manner was constrained." This constrained behavior reflects the love for his daughter that is constrained within him; perhaps he is not ready to reveal it, and thus emotionally shields himself with a veil of cold ~~distaste~~ distaste. While Elizabeth is described ~~as~~ with ~~words~~ ~~evoking~~ diction evoking warmth such as "pretty and picturesque," Henchard is described with "coldness... truly genteel." This cold refusal to look upon his daughter, in addition to his own elitist views, are revealed by his belief that dialect words are "ferrile marks of the beast." Perhaps it is because he was not always rich that Henchard tries so hard to associate himself with the upper-class and adopt their elite and condescending notions. He cannot bear to look upon his daughter, as she reminds him both of the social class he once belonged to as well as the pitiful existence he abandoned her in. In other words, Henchard's coldness may ~~also~~ be indicative of his guilt for the manner in which Elizabeth has lived.

This preoccupation with elitism and social class is repeated when Henchard declares his daughter "fit to carry wash to a pig-trough," to which Elizabeth reddens "with shame." This act of reddening is repeated by Henchard later, implying that their feelings of shame may not be so different. While Elizabeth is ashamed to have disappointed her father, Henchard is ashamed that her "disappointing" behavior is his own fault. Hardy shows Elizabeth's humility and obedience by listing her changes in lexicon, including "greggles" to "wild hyacinths" as well as "hag-rid" to "indigestion." But her father remains her "bitterest" critic, especially of her handwriting; this is ironic because he himself is "uncultivated... a poor fool with a pen." This hypocrisy reveals ~~that~~ two things: one, that her father's views are partially built on unfair and misogynistic standards, and two, that his expectations for his daughter are ~~not~~ based just as much on her "failures" as they are on his own. He is ashamed by his own "uncultivated" nature, which he attempts to hide by having Elizabeth write his legal document for him, but Elizabeth remains unchanged, with "elephantine, ~~but~~ round, bold" handwriting, and an underlying obedience and willingness to "saddle herself with manual labors." But for all her efforts, she is never able to receive the warmth hidden "underneath" Henchard; the more she ~~is~~ changes to meet his expectations, "the more she seemed to estrange him." Once again, this is indicative of the fact that Henchard's lack of affection has less to do with her social class or behavior and more to do with his failures. He cannot look upon her without being ashamed of both his past and present; he is ashamed by his own harshness, even as it reforms his daughter in a manner of his supposed liking.

By using diction and tone contrasting the two characters, Hardy establishes their relationship as one filled with distance, torn by Kenward's shame in regards to ^{both} his past mistakes and social class.

Human relationships are usually ~~are~~ incredibly complex in that there ~~are~~ both ~~are~~ combative and affectionate aspects to it. The ~~crux~~ ^{the} of human ~~of~~ relationship is paradoxical in nature. In this passage from Thomas Hardy's The Mayor of Casterbridge, Hardy exposes such a relationship in the dynamics between Michael Henchard and his daughter, Elizabeth-Jane. ~~Both~~ Estranged for many years, both know the face of party but Elizabeth's father rises above it and tries to model himself ~~as~~ ^{after} ~~part~~ of the upper-reckleons of society as he becomes a wealthy mayor. Their relationship is rooted in a ~~rather~~ ~~dominant-subservient~~ ^{subversive} dynamic with Elizabeth changing her identity to her father's every tune and wish. Yet, paradoxically, as her father begins to transform her, he feels increasingly estranged to Elizabeth. In this Hardy exposes the root of ~~the~~ ^{their} relationship: ~~Henchard~~ finds ^a connection to his daughter in her ~~backhands~~ ^{and} ~~common~~ ways ~~that~~ and fails to love the idealized version he holds in his head. He grows detached to his daughter as she becomes socially perfect but father from an identity truer to his own. Elizabeth's ~~deference~~ to her father and his chiding remarks on her ways exposes ~~a~~ ^a ~~contrast~~ ^{contrast} ~~between~~ ^{between} coldness and passion ~~in~~ in their relationship as well as an understanding and respect. Hardy writes that Henchard's announcement of himself to Elizabeth as her ~~father~~ father "half caused the point of ~~set~~ affection with her" and a "coldness and constraint." This characterization exposes the contrasting duality in the father-daughter relationship as ~~strat~~ there is both a connection and an estrangement. Hardy establishes the relationship with the father as the dominant character and ~~uses~~ ^{uses} a ~~mix~~ ^{mix of passionate and} ~~of~~ cold diction to reveal the father's compassion yet estrangement with his daughter. ~~The~~ The father is described as the "bitterest critic," to "sharply echo" his critiques and to deliver "sharp reprimands." ~~These~~ ^{These} characterizations and diction expose both the harshful demanding nature the father has for his daughter but also his caring nature towards her. In ^{passionate} diction, Hardy veils the father's affection for his daughter. ~~He~~ ^{Herchard} cares for his daughter but the combination of estrangement and ~~his~~ ^{his} ideal vision came out as cold and harsh.

Hardy uses ~~poignant~~ ^{poignant} diction and heavily contrasting ideas to expose the paradox in Herchard and Elizabeth's relationship: the more Elizabeth grows to be the daughter that Herchard envisions of, the more he grows detached of her. Hardy reveals that slowly, slowly, Elizabeth sheds of her common skin and begins "improving." It's interesting to note that Herchard is concerned primarily with trivial social artifacts such as how Elizabeth speaks or writes. This concern exposes Herchard's dream for a daughter unlike himself that is accustomed to the perfect social ways in a way that "a seasonal farmworker from a small country town" could ~~never~~ ^{never}

Joe. As Elizabeth progresses and ~~loses~~^{needs} her father's ~~words~~^{words}, ~~showing~~^{showing} her deference ^{to} and respect ^{for} him, he grows "cold." Hardy writes that Henchard's "passionate" ~~reprimands~~^{reprimands} of her ways had "less terror for [Elizabeth] than his coldness." The passionate scoldings at least held affection. ~~In~~^{In} contrast, the colder language ~~exposes~~^{exposes} an estrangement and dislike. Though Henchard ~~wishes~~^{wishes} for a daughter of refined appearance and manner, he ~~needs~~^{needs} one ~~who is~~^{who is} true to her identity and ~~true~~^{true} to him.

In conclusion, Henchard and Elizabeth have a complex relationship that ~~is~~^{is} rooted in both estrangement and affection. Elizabeth naturally defers to the ~~power~~^{power} of her father out of respect or simply out of her nature. Her father in turn tries to shape her to the socially perfect person he could ~~never~~^{never} be. But, in this, their relationship takes a paradoxical twist as the ~~father~~^{father} grows to not like his "true" daughter. Ironically, he finds true connection in the "common" daughter he had as she was closer to his true identity. With this, Hardy reveals that relationships might be complex for a reason; a perfect one ~~is~~^{is} too simple for the complexity that is human nature.

In the excerpt from Thomas Hardy's The Mayor of Casterbridge, Elizabeth-Jane is reunited with her father, Michael Henchard. Their interactions with each other during this time reveal the complex relationship between father and daughter, ~~which~~^{it} is only made more complicated by Henchard's varying degrees of "passion" and "coldness" and Elizabeth's meek nature, resulting in a relationship devoid of real communication where neither person really understands the other

^{Since}
~~From~~^{has been} the very beginning, Henchard's reappearance in Elizabeth's life ~~is~~ nothing short of an "enigma" to her. His original announcement is full of "an ardour and an agitation" that makes Elizabeth almost think he cares for her, but then he becomes ~~more~~ "constrained" and cold, ~~and cold~~. Henchard also possesses a penchant for pointing out the pettiest of Elizabeth's mistakes, so often in fact that with her ^{obedient, humble} ~~subdued~~ nature, she ~~gradually~~ begins to believe that speaking and acting the way she does is her ~~fault~~ own fault, calling it a "grievous failing" when she speaks how she is used to speaking, in "pretty and picturesque" common dialect, and believing it an "improvement" each time she "no longer" says a ~~word~~ word in the improper way.

From Elizabeth's point of view, it seems as though her father does not care for her. However, since Henchard tends to hide his emotions or be unable to express them, there is no way to know exactly why he behaves the way he does towards Elizabeth-Jane. It is possible that, having risen from rags to riches himself, he may want the same ^{for} ~~from~~ his daughter, for her to end up in a better place than he is in. He does ask whether Elizabeth is "only fit to carry wash to a pig-trough when she errs in her speech, implying that he wants her to be doing far ~~no~~ greater things than manual labor. ~~Unfortunatly~~ Unfortunately for Henchard, Elizabeth's docile character causes her to willingly do work, "manual labors" to ensure that ~~amatt~~ she would not be burdening another. This kindness and generosity is not what Henchard wants from his daughter; he wants a "proper young girl" who will uphold his reputation. In contrast to him, however, Elizabeth ~~is~~ is the type to have been a ~~strong~~ strong figure for women had it been many years later, but "other ideas reigned then."

Due to their many differences and Elizabeth's status as a young woman in the ~~late~~ late 19th century, father and daughter are unable to communicate their differences and their relationship stays in a sort of limbo, with "protruding needle-rocks" which only hint at "what was underneath, and which only served to further " estrange him" from her.

The relationship that Elizabeth shares with her father, Henchard, is unhealthy - Henchard looks down upon his own daughter for being a bit 'rough around the edges', in the same way he was, before he attained his prestigious position as town mayor. Thomas Hardy expresses the negativity in their relationship with the use of tone, diction, and particular selection of details.

The stark difference between Elizabeth's tone and Henchard's tone immediately reveals the lack of balance in their relationship. In the description of the first interaction they share (in this passage), Elizabeth kindly asks a question using words that Hardy describes as "terrible marks of the beast to the truly genteel." (12-13). Her father responds to the diction she used in her question to him with clear anger, which is expressed in his tone: "Good God, are you only fit to carry wash to a pig-trough, that ye use such words as those?" (19-20) His tone of voice is inappropriately harsh and violent, and unapologetically so. When Henchard and a business man ~~require~~ require someone to write their contract, Henchard recruits the help of his daughter. However, his tone is like that of a ruler or master of her. He doesn't ask for her help - he simply commands her to help: "Here, Elizabeth Jane" ... "just write down what I tell you ... " (47-48) The little amount of respect Henchard addresses Elizabeth with is incredible.

Hardy convey's the unbalanced relationship they share even more with his ~~se~~ word choice. He uses gentler words to describe Elizabeth, and more harsh ones to describe Henchard. When he insults her speech over their first dinner, Hardy tells us he echoes her "sharply". In contrast, he describes Elizabeth's response to ~~the~~ her father as said in a "low, humble voice". Elizabeth's father speaks to her sharply, while she speaks to him in a low, humble manner, further displaying the lack of balance in their relationship.

Another interesting method, exaggerating certain details, also helps Hardy expose their relationship. For example, he devoted an entire paragraph to telling all the words Elizabeth changes in her speech after her father instructs her to do so. Although her changed vocabulary may not seem a significant enough detail to devote an entire paragraph to, Hardy does ~~se~~ this to fully encompass all that Elizabeth must change to please her father. He makes a point to show us all of the details of Elizabeth's misery, no matter how insignificant they may seem.

→ In the story "The Mayor of Casterbridge (1886)", written by Thomas Hardy, the author shows how one's social upbringing can cause such tension and hatred. Hardy is able to showcase this through his tone, word choice, and also as a result of his selection and attention to detail.

→ Hardy set his tone right from the beginning of this particular excerpt from "The Mayor of Casterbridge." This became evident when he stated, "He had done it in an ardour and an agitation..." (Line 4-5). By stating this in the first few sentences, the reader is able to feel the tension that already exists. This shows the reader that the relationship between the two is not all roses, but rather almost hatred, and conflicting. The tone is also set through Hardy's word choice, which helps show his portrayal of the complex relationship between the two characters.

→ An author's word choice plays a huge role in the overall tone and theme in a passage. Hardy shows this when he states, "coldness" (Line 9), "Brievous" (Line 10), and also "She reddened with shame and sadness." (Line 21). By using these particular words, the reader is able to greatly analyse the situation and all the feelings that come with it. The author makes sure he includes no happy and fulfilling words in this particular excerpt. This allows the reader to understand that there is some kind of bitterness between these two characters. This is an example of how Hardy pays attention to his selection of detail.

→ Hardy becomes very specific throughout the excerpt in order to add greater depth and meaning. For example in lines 28 and 29, he stated, "that she no longer spoke of "dumplings" but of "humble-bees". The author chose to be very specific when it came to her vocabulary changing. This showed that Elizabeth went from taking in a past, proper English sense, to the more modern English that we use today. This allowed the reader to visualize how greatly Elizabeth's attitude and actions change due to one situation.

→ Thomas Hardy was able to provide a good portrayal of the complex relationship between the two characters, Henchard and Elizabeth, by using tone, his word choice, and also his attention to the selection of detail. Nobody is perfect. We all will inevitably mess up and be criticized for it, but sometimes, we are right in what we do but are still ~~criticized~~ criticized for it. Elizabeth-Jane is no stranger to this. In Thomas Hardy's The Mayor of Casterbridge, Michael Henchard and Elizabeth-Jane's relationship is one of demeaning criticism.

We see this criticism from Michael almost every time Elizabeth talks. Whenever she ~~uses~~ speaks using a lower-class word, she is reprimanded and told how she must say it. This criticism especially comes out when he says, "Good God, are you only fit to carry wash to a pig-trough, that ye use such words as those?" He demeans her by inferring that she is basically talking like a servant would.

Through this passages tone we can also see his demeanings. Any time he talks to her, whether it be for ~~speaking~~ speaking wrong or having her write up an agreement, he talks with a tone ~~that~~ is that of chiding and demeans her to something less than what she is.

Word choice is another major point, not by the author, but by the characters. Elizabeth's word choice is one of the few ~~things~~ things that sets her apart from her father. Through this low-level speech, Michael creates his criticisms and demeans her for her word choice.

Even Michael's word choice is specific to demeaning her. Every time she messes up, he ~~ex~~ exclaims, ~~good God~~ "Good God..." as if her speaking is physically hurting him.

Most of the criticism spouts from how different their jobs are. Michael is an upper-class member as the Mayor while Elizabeth is a low-class member as a tavern waitress. This is what stems the very different behavior that causes Michael's scorn and derision.

Though in the end of ~~the~~ the excerpt, Michael ~~apologizes for his~~ ~~harshness~~ apologizes for his harshness, the criticisms continue and his dislike for her grows showing that no matter

Thomas Hardy used tone, diction, and detail very well to compose a story such as this one. This excerpt from ~~the~~ "The Mayor of Casterbridge" portrays a clear complex relationship between a father and daughter. Hardy's use of literary tools ~~is~~ is a key part of understanding this complex relationship. C1

Hardy used diction as one of the main components of this piece. "An agitation which had half carried the point of affection with her," Thomas Hardy uses words like "agitation" leading to ~~agitation~~ "affection" ~~to~~ by choice. This is to help the reader understand the contrast of these two words and make the reader think twice. In line 16 Elizabeth offers to get something for her father, but instead her father insults the way she speaks and compares her to someone "only fit to carry wash to a pig-trough." Both incidents mentioned above imply both love and hate or kindness and egotism, very opposite feelings or actions.

Elizabeth-Jane constantly followed orders and took ~~the~~ the negativity because she knew no different, she was constantly in an environment where contradictory ~~emotions~~ emotions ~~was~~ was a ~~contradiction~~

In Thomas Hardy's The Mayor of Casterbridge the relation between the mayor Maltenchard and his daughter is a strange one. They had not seen each other in years and during that time he rised from a farmworker to the mayor of a small town. while his daughter worked at a tavern. With the wealth he gained, Mr. Hlenchard's way of speaking turned from slung to formal. His daughter however still had her same old accent and he wants her to speak like him.
