Shakespeare Imagery Essay
Essay Plan Page on Imagery in Macbeth

Thesis Sentence: Shakespeare adeptly utilizes fair/foul, light/darkness and blood imagery to emphasize Macbeth's gradual psychological disintegration into madness resulting from the domination of his consuming ambition, unhampered by his weakening moral constraints.

Topic Sentence 1: Fair/foul imagery helps to emphasize Macbeth's dwelling ambition. Once Macbeth allows his ambition to dominate his decisions/actions, it is hard to stop and turn back.

Quote 1: "There's no art/To find the mind's construction in the face." (I, iv) Duncan

Quote 2: "To know my deed 'twere best not know myself." (Pg. 177)

Quote 3: "I have supped full with horrors." (Pg. 177)

Topic Sentence 2: Light/darkness or day/night imagery illustrates Macbeth's struggle between light and darkness. His slide toward darkness into eventual depravity.

Quote 1: "Let not night see my black and deep desires..." (I, iv)

Quote 2: "And yet dark night strangles the travelling lamp... That darkness does the face..." (II, iv) (Ross)

Quote 3: "Out, out, brief candle! Life's but a walking shadow..." (V, vi)

Topic Sentence 3: Blood imagery symbolizes Macbeth's guilt that becomes a permanent stain on Macbeth's conscience.

Blood, accompanied by violence, is everywhere in Macbeth.

Quote 1: "It will have blood, they say; blood will have blood." (III, iv) "My hands are of your color..." (Pg. 59)

Quote 2: "And wash this filthy witness from your hand." (II, ii) "What, will these hands ne'er be clean?" (5.1)

Quote 3: "Canst thou hot minister to a mind diseased..." (V, iii)
"Fair is foul, and foul is fair.
Shakespeare is Imagery, and Imagery is Shakespeare"

A multifaceted technique, imagery is the use of illustrative and imaginative language to reveal different aspects of an element. Many writers use imagery to convey a picture without saying directly what the image is thus adding depth to a piece of work. In Macbeth, Shakespeare adeptly utilizes fair/foul, light/darkness, and blood imagery to emphasize Macbeth's gradual psychological disintegration into madness resulting from the domination of his consuming ambition, unhampered by his weakening moral constraints.

Fair/foul imagery helps to emphasize Macbeth's dwelling ambition. Macbeth appears to be a valiant warrior and a gracious host, but is secretly plotting Duncan's death. The problem, the play suggests, is that it is difficult to "find the mind's construction in the face" (I, iv, 14) of anyone, let alone Macbeth. With "daggers in men's smiles" (II, iii, 165), Macbeth gains an almost inhuman strength and courage after the murder of Duncan, his first crime. He becomes more courageous in crime than he has even been in virtuous deed. "[S]upped full with horrors" (V, v, 15), Macbeth acknowledges the ambition he had always harbored. Ambition is what drives him to ever more terrible atrocities. His ambition drives him to a point where he can't even recognize himself, when "his way of life [begins] fall'n into the sere" (V, iii, 26-27). Once Macbeth allows his ambition to dominate his decisions and actions, it is difficult to stop and turn back.

Throughout the play, light/darkness or day/night imagery illustrates Macbeth's struggle between light and darkness, good and evil, humility and ambition. The night of Duncan's murder, Macbeth asks for darkness to hide "[his] black and deep desires" (I, iv, 58) and darkness clouds the night of the murder. Darkness is also used to describe the unnatural character of Macbeth's crime in killing the king when Ross remarks
By th' clock 'tis day

And yet dark night strangles the traveling lamp.

Is't night's predominance or the day's shame

That darkness does not face of earth entomb

When living light should kiss it? (II, iv, 8-12)

This symbolizes Macbeth's inability to confront his deeds and needs the dark to hide what he is doing. "To know [Macbeth's] deed, 'twere best not know [himself]" (II, ii, 93). He would of preferred being unconscious and naive rather than acknowledging his deed. Duncan represented the light in the first two acts. Therefore at Duncan's death, Macbeth's struggle went in favor of darkness. After his first crime, Macbeth turns to violence and bloodshed to satisfy his growing ambition and guarantee his power. Ironically, as Macbeth slides toward depravity, he guarantees his loss of power when Macduff vows to avenge his family's death and free Scotland of Macbeth's tyranny. Macduff now symbolizing the light, Macbeth's ambition becomes "a walking shadow... [who] struts and frets his hour upon the stage/ And then is heard no more" (V, v, 27-29). As the play nears the end, light and dark must reach a climactic battle, where Macduff faces Macbeth, good confronting evil.

Blood, accompanied by violence, is omnipresent in Macbeth. Blood imagery comes to symbolize Macbeth's guilt that becomes a permanent stain on Macbeth's conscience. Macbeth cries after the murder is committed, even as Lady Macbeth scolds him and claims a little water will "wash this filthy witness from [his] hand[s]" (II, ii, 61). But "blood will have blood" (III, iv, 151) and Macbeth will continue to use violence as a means of disposing threats. The physical stain of blood becomes a mental one as Macbeth and Lady Macbeth continue to bear the burden of their guilt. They cannot answer the question of whether their hands will ever be clean and therefore cannot answer the emptying void inside themselves. Unable to bear the guilt, Lady Macbeth takes her own life, leaving Macbeth to ask the doctor whether he can "minister to a mind diseased" (V, iii, 50). But the doctor solemnly replies that one with such a disease "must minister to himself" (V, iv, 57).

Shakespeare uses fair/foul, light/darkness, and blood imagery to reveal things that cannot be seen to the reader such as Macbeth's psychological state, deepening ambition, and residing guilt. Therefore, imagery allows Macbeth to become a character characterized by internal confictions rather than external appearances. As Macbeth continues to acknowledge the coaxing of his ambition, he nears the edge of total madness, the brink of mental deterioration. Macbeth literally becomes a "walking shadow" (V, v, 27) of corruption, moral unbalance, and hopeless desperation.
