SHERLOCK STORIES: Seminar Presentations

Your group’s seminar presentation should be a coherent discussion that helps your classmates appreciate your chosen Sherlock story. Provide an extensive handout in note format, which will serve as a kind of “mini-Cliff Note,” giving information needed for a thorough understanding of the story. Include all the topics on this assignment sheet in reproducible form (typed or printed in black ink). The very best handouts will be more than thorough -- perhaps even provocative. Your presentation should take from 20 to 30 minutes, but it should not be a mechanical rendering of information already on the handout. (Remember that as teachers, you will also be expected to evaluate your lesson and assess your classmates’ learning!)

1. Summary: Do not tell everything, but rather prepare a seductive and intriguing teaser for the story. You could treat this as a trailer for the mystery.

2. The Doyle Canon: Is this work typical? Are the themes in your story consistent with themes in other works by Doyle? Sift through your information, interpreting and emphasizing what is truly relevant. Show us the connections.

3. Technical Details about the Short Story:
   A. Setting: Describe the setting, as to both time and place. Is the setting integral to the story or independent? Analyze whether a change in setting would significantly alter the story.
   B. Major Characters: List and analyze the major characters. Discuss dominant traits and significant actions. Are they flat or round, static or dynamic? Examine whether character is revealed directly or indirectly. Explore character relationships. Identify protagonist and antagonist. Note any foils or doubles.
   C. Minor Characters: List and analyze the minor characters. Talk the talk necessary for analysis. Explore character relationships. What function do minor characters serve?
   D. Point of View: How does Watson’s narration influence the reader?
   E. Plot Structure: List and analyze the elements of plot (narrative hook, exposition, rising action, climax or turning point, falling action, and resolution). Does the story fit Freytag’s pyramid, or is it organized differently? Are the conflicts internal or external? Specifically, who vs. whom? Are the conflicts resolved?
   F. Theme: List several possible themes offered by your story rather than committing your group to one and one alone. Indicate whether theme is stated or implied. Remember theme must be a statement; no questions allowed!

4. The Clues: List the most important clues in order.

5. Significant Quotations: Cite sentences and/or passages which seem significant or which illustrate Doyle’s style. Include the page number and be prepared to discuss what each quotation means, why you chose it, and how it is important to the story. Remember that dialogue and quotation are not the same thing.

6. Special Topics: What special line of inquiry interests your group? You might consider additional technical aspects, such as irony, satire, figurative language, or symbolism. Does this story take a stand about family relationships, sexual attitudes, racial discrimination, economics, politics, or religion? Might the Seven Deadly Sins or the Seven Cardinal Virtues be relevant? Or a discussion of sins of omission vs. sins of commission?

   You could discuss plot patterns, such as rite of passage, initiation, fall from innocence, or quest. Or examine motifs, such as death and rebirth or cycles of nature. You might apply Northrop Frye’s heroic types or Joseph Campbell’s plot paradigm. Or Sigmund Freud’s id, ego, and superego? Or Carl Jung’s archetypes? Perhaps there are contrasts that produce tension within the story: Reason vs. Emotion, Knowledge vs. Ignorance, Realism vs. Romanticism, Civilization vs. Savagery, Age vs. Youth, Male vs. Female? And on and on and on…
SHERLOCK STORIES: Seminar Presentations

Students _____________________________________________ Block _____ Date _________

____________________________________________________________________________________

Short Story ________________________________________________________________

******************************************************************************
Handout (        pages)
******************************************************************************

1. Summary ( 5)
2. The Doyle Canon ( 5)
3. Setting (10)
4. Major Characters (10)
5. Minor Characters (10)
6. Point of View (10)
7. Plot Structure (10)
8. Theme (10)
9. The Clues (10)
10. Quotes (10)

Special Topic: (10)

******************************************************************************
Oral Presentation
******************************************************************************

1. Lesson Plan & Organization (10)
2. Speaking Voice(s) (10)
3. Teaches Story (15)
4. Knowledge of Story (30)
5. Answering Questions (10)
6. Your Turn to Grade: (25)

___________________________________________________________________________
___________________________________________________________________________

POINTS POSSIBLE (100)

____ Handout On Time
____ Reproducible
____ Note Format
____ Spelling OK
____ Punctuation OK

Oral Presentation ____ points
+ Handout ____ points

TOTAL ____ points
Letter Grade ____%

Comments: ________________________________________________________________
_________________________________________________________________________
_________________________________________________________________________
_________________________________________________________________________